THE GAME QUESTION.

The Gun Club Does Not Replenish, but Protects Game.

Ed. APPEAL.—Much has been said of late of the destruction of game, in your paper. Now, I do not think any organized club will ever replenish the game in this State. They may organize as a club to utilize their spare time, but to replenish game will be impossible, as everything is against game in Nevada. Our streams do not give any protection to young ducks or game, as their banks are barren of foliage and marshy swales and shrubbery. Most of our streams are artificially made, and the ranchers forget to plant willows to protect game, so when the young game appears it is exposed to preying animals, and of course, killed before they can squack. Another destroyer of game is the Indians. They will wade in the swales at low water after the ducks and catch them before they are feathered enough to fly.

In the month of August they are easily caught, as their quills are not strong enough to carry them out of reach of the Indian, who is well prepared to catch them. I have seen them strip off their garments and wade after the young ducks, as many as forty at one gathering.

The coyote also kills young ducks by the hundreds. I have seen them kill more young ducks than they could carry at one time, but the coyote does not leave his game to waste, carrying two at a time and going back after the rest, going back and forth until he gets his game where he wants it.

A. READER.

Our correspondent misinterprets the meaning of the word "protect," and from the general trend of the letter it seems as though he expected the gun club to start a duck nursery. Such is not the case, however, and all the club is organized for is to stop as soon as possible just such movements as he mentions.

The statement that ducks breed in streams that are not protected is hardly based on facts, as the ducks take particular pains to breed in the low marshy lands, where the water remains all the year round and the tules grow rampant.

A NEW INDUSTRY.

A Sugar Factory to be Built at Santa Monica.

We clip the following from the Los Angeles Express:

It has been learned from a thoroughly reliable source that Senator John P. Jones has instructed the manager of his Santa Monica estate not to plant to grain this year.

As stated in last evening's Express, some time ago Senator Jones sent a quantity of sugar beets to San Francisco to be refined, and the result has proved so satisfactory that his intention this year is to plant the ranch to the bulbous vegetable. In his letter of instruction Senator Jones informs his foreman that he has consulted with Claus Spreckles and that the latter is highly delighted with the sugar-beet production of Santa Monica. Mr. Spreckles has agreed, so the letter states, to join Mr. Jones in the erection of a sugar factory at Santa Monica.

This news will be thankfully received by the people, and no doubt will pave the way to opening up other manufacturing interests in Southern California.

In this connection a few particulars may be of interest regarding sugar-beet culture. A gentleman who has paid considerable attention to the matter was seen and he furnished the following:

"As a rule I find the land in this and adjoining land first-class in every particular, being bounteously supplied with the essential elements for the growth of a perfect sugar beet.

"Summing everything up and counting many minor profits accruing from the growth of the sugar beet, I venture the assertion that one acre of good land planted in sugar beets and thoroughly cultivated can be made to yield a profit of $145 or $150 annually."

It seems peculiar that John P. Jones does not utilize the best soil of this State. The alkali land is the best soil in the world for an industry of this kind.
